(42~44)

My friend Irene was someone who I will always remember. She was a happy woman who always thought about other people. However, not everything went well in her life. In fact, she had an unhappy childhood. Before she was born, her parents were hoping for a baby boy. They did not spend much time with her. When she was four years old, her father died, and her mother left her with her grandmother. So Irene was shy and lonely during her childhood.

But Irene became sure of herself later because she found something to be proud of. She was good at sports like tennis and swimming. When she grew up, her childhood experiences helped her to better understand what other people needed. She often taught sports to children from poor families and helped them with their homework. She hoped that every child could grow up happily.

Unfortunately, Irene died of cancer last month. We were all very sad. Her own little boy is just five years old. He might not remember very much about his mother, so we have decided to write down some stories about Irene. We hope that the little boy will understand how much his mother loved him, and that he will have a good example to follow in the future.

- (A) She hated being a girl.
- (B) She had problems with speaking.
- (C) Her grandmother did not like her.
- (D) Her parents did not spend enough time with her.

43. What does something mean in the reading?

- (A) Being born a girl.
- (B) Being good at sports.
- (C) Becoming popular with her friends.
- (D) Helping children with their homework.

44. Why do Irene's friends want to write about her life?

- (A) Irene asked them to do so.
- (B) Irene was a famous person.
- (C) They want to make Irene's son rich.
- (D) They want Irene's son to know more about Irene.
